OFFICIAL PAPER OF LINCOLN COUNTY

THURSDAY, : : SEPT. 12, 1895

THAT H. H. Holmes is guilty of many murders we have no doubt; yet, we are loth to believe him responsible for all the "mysterious disappearances" of the past decade or two.

THE people of the effete east were "shocked" by an earthquake Sunday week. Social "shocks" in the east—especially among the 400—are every-day occurrences, with Sundays thrown in.

THERE is a man in Iowa named Surplus. He is not a democrat, but a republican. It was not known, before he was discovered, that the republican party ever had such a thing as a Surplus.—Albuquerque Democrat.

GEN. SCHOFIELD retires from the command of the army by age limitation on the 29th inst. Gen. N. A. Miles is next in line of succession. The president, however, has the prerogative to ignore seniority for what he may deem cause; and it is thought will do so, on account of Miles' management of the Genosimo campaign. However, as Miles is nearly related to John Sherman by marriage, and the latter and Grover have recently been made one at the golden altar, maybe the president will stop and think a little. In the always possible event of trouble arising from a justly indignant people, it would be handy to have the officer commanding the army in full sympathy with administration methods.

HOME OR FOREIGN MISSIONS. Millions of dollars are sent annually to foreign shores to foreign missionaries to save the souls of foreigners and heathens, while in America there are today a million souls wrung by poverty and stung by affliction, without laymen or preacher to succor them or minister to their physical or spiritual wants.

The story told by Labor Leader Sovereign of the suffering of the human chattels who are crying so piteously for a return to slavery is the most pathetic appeal of the decade. The agony of the wail is distressing, and the indignation of honest men can not find fitting expression, when one hears that attempts to relieve the distress were met with the response, "starve and be damned." And this, we are told, happened in Illinois, where men toil in the bowels of the earth, away from air and sunshine, for the beggarly pittance of 60 cents a day.

Missionaries are sent to China, where Christianity is unwelcome and murder is the reward of an unselfish consecration to the cause of Christ. Millions of dollars are subscribed to keep these "faithful servants of God" in that barbarous land, while the Illinois men and women are starving for bread and human sympathy.

Turn the faces of these foreign missionaries to this land of woe, let them put as much zeal into the work here as they do there, and public sentiment would soon force an adjustment of the wrongs the "human chattels" of America are dying under.—Denver Times.

A WOMAN'S ESTIMATE OF "NEW WOMEN"

In an address before the Salvation Army, at its recent encampment on Staten Island, N. Y., Mrs. Ballington Booth, choosing as her subject "The New Woman," said in part:

"The revolting creature, gaudily attired in man's clothing, possessed of strange notions about the home, wifehood and motherhood, scorned and shunned by the men, is not my idea of the new woman. The new woman, according to the popular acceptance, speaks of children as 'brats,' says they tire and aggravate her, and she bestows all her love upon some ugly little pugnosed dog, which she carries in one of her mannish pockets. She is also man-hater, and in going forth to seek emancipation and a world-wide rule for her sex, she declares it to be her mission to down and belittle him. As for religion, it is too simple for her strong mind. She is entirely independent and a free-thinker.

"If you were to ask me what the Salvation Army would do with the 'new woman,'" continued Mrs. Booth, "in reply, we would first of all take her dress and change it. Out of her huge sleeves we would make dresses for the ragged children of the slums, and other garments worn by her, which I forbear to mention, we would give to the sex to whom they belonged. Her books, filled with pernicious literature, we would throw in the fire along with her cigarettes and chewing gum, and after this I think we would prescribe a strong-willed, self-assertive husband, who would teach her that there is something to honor in the other sex.

"I believe in the advanced woman, I believe she is capable of making a good mother and wife as though she had never stepped upon the platform, or been admitted to the bar. Let the education of women go on, only while you are training them, do not forget to develop the heart."

THE PISTOL HABIT.

It is impossible to read the newspapers without coming to the conclusion that the pistol habit is almost an epidemic in this country. It is confined to no section, race, nationality, or class. On the same day that we read of a pistol murder in Tennessee New York comes to the front with the murder of one brother by another and the murder of a wife by her husband. We hear of the pistol everywhere. The manufacturers and the dealers must be coining money. It must be the biggest industry in the country.

Pistols in the court room, pistols in the jury room, pistols in church, pistols indoor and out, in the bar room and in my lady's boudoir—pistols, pistols everywhere!

No wonder we have murders. How can a man tote a pistol during this bow-wow weather without using it when his fevered brain reels under the malign influence of the dog star?

But it is said that bad men defy the law and carry pistols, and thus make it necessary for good citizens to arm themselves. This is a mistake. All that is necessary is to enforce the law, and enforce it quickly and with crushing severity. If the policemen and detectives would be half as alert about this one thing as they are about some very unimportant matters, they would have regiments of pistol-toters before the courts.

We are not talking about any one locality. We are striking at a national crime. The hip-pocket pistol murders more people in this country every year than perish in the average Central American or Cuban revolution. In the majority of cases good men are the victims. Under our present lax system every citizen when he goes down town in the morning is at the mercy of some excitable fellow who loses his head on account of the weather or some imaginary grievance.

Even when the pistol-toter does not make targets of his fellow-citizens there is danger. Many a man commits suicide because he has a pistol. If he had been unarmed, he would have recovered from his depression and life would again have had charms for him. The pistol habit is a bad one from every point of view, and the courts, the press, the pulpit and public opinion should combine and smash it.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE Las Vegas Examiner is spreading out, and deserves well of its clientele.

Mrs. E. E. Davis, of San Miguel, Cal., says: "I am trying in a measure to repay the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for the great good their remedy has done me. For years I was a constant sufferer from weak lungs and bronchial asthma. My rest at night was disturbed by a hacking cough, so that I felt miserable the greater part of the time. Many remedies recommended by friends were tried, none of which proved suitable to my case. I did not experience any beneficial results until I began taking Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. After two bottles of the large size have been used I am pleased to state, my health is better than it has been for years. The soreness has left my lungs and chest and I can breathe easily. It has done me so much good that I want all who are suffering from lung troubles as I was, to give it a trial." Far sale by Dr. M. G. Padon.

How To Cure Yourself While Using It.

To quit suddenly is to receive a shock to the system, as tobacco, to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. Be-cause it is a stimulant, it is a habit that is hard to break. We give a written guarantee to cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with 10 per cent. interest. THE COMING MAN.

Time.—Year 2000.

Scene.—Dining room of Mrs. and Mr. Laterday.

Each is arrayed in a costume reversed from the custom of their ancestors. The wife wears an ultra style of bloomers, with vest, cutaway coat and black four-in-hand necktie. Hair short and parted in the middle. The husband is clothed in a light blue wrapper, fluffy sleeves, close cut beard and long hair arranged in a la mode of the latest French knot. They sit at the breakfast table, Susan reading the morning paper, while John is slowly pouring out the coffee, frowning and muttering incoherent sentences as the right sleeve of his morning gown falls accidentally into the dark, Brazilian beverage before him. The children, Mary and Willie, respectively 13 and 14 years of age, occupy seats on either side of the table.

John's mind wanders in retrospection as with a dolly he dries the moistened gloves. This is the tenor of his thoughts: "Little did the fathers of 1895 conceive that their posterity would think, act and dress as they do today. Have I am a continual home body and haven't the opportunity of leaving my duties even for a moment. The entire morning is consumed in caring for the children, getting them ready for school, cleaning their faces and hands, and above all plaiting little Willie's hair, which reaches to his waist—and such a lovely color. Then it is so hard to keep his dresses clean, more so than my own, though I am constantly in the kitchen, and darn the holes in his stockings.

"Alas! I wish boys wore pants as they did 100 years ago. But then I can't complain, for he is so amiable and quiet. If he were but like Mary and could dress in his dresses, I should have no trouble in keeping him clean and respectable. Her bloomers are never soiled, her short, barber cut hair so easily brushed, and if she were not so robust, rolling back and forth, I should not care for her. I live in constant dread that Willie may become 'Tom girlish' and Mary lose her head or a limb while playing football or cricket. A housekeeper's life is indeed a hard one."

At this juncture Susan lays aside the paper, saying: "This is miserable. Stocks and bonds are depreciating rapidly, the 'goldbugs' of Wall street are riding rough shod recklessly over all competitors and monopolists are oppressing private industries with heels of iron. (Looking up.) John, dear, the coffee is very weak. Why don't you scold the cook? You know I haven't the time to overlook domestic affairs, being absent from home all day. And the biscuits, dearest. How different from those my father used to make. (Sighing.) Poor me, I shall have dyspepsia before another week is ended. (Turning to Mary)—Daughter, how do you like your new bicycle?"

Mary—Oh, it is just too nice for anything, and I have outstripped every girl in the neighborhood racing round the block. They are all envious of me. But what do you think, mamma? Willie asked me yesterday to let him ride, and straddle at that. (Willie blushes and covers his face with his hands as he violently coughs. The idea of my brother, a boy, wanting to ride a bicycle! It is ridiculous, indecent. What would the other girls say?)

Mother (almost unmoved by the disclosure of Willie's desire)—I am astounded that my son, a Laterday, should so far have forgotten himself as to act in a manner so unbecomingly a little gentleman. Be content, my child, with your dolls and dresses. These are better suited to your position.

Father (soothingly)—There, darling, don't cry. Mother didn't intend to hurt my little angel's feelings. Susan, you should deal more gently with the gentler sex.

Mother—Hush, John. You are little better than your son. Your head is as soft as putty.

Tears come into John's eyes. He and Willie weep violently, while the mother and daughter sit in silence, apparently deploring the weakness of the male sex.

After the lapse of a few moments John, an ideal husband, believing his wife's criticism to be just and proper, recovers a smile, and Willie, replacing a fallen hairpin, stuffs a battercake in his mouth. At this interval the maid, an Irishman, clad in lavender skirt, green waist and leather belt, enters, hands warm buckwheats around, and with a light "curry" exits.

Willie—John, I prefer that you engage a German or an Englishman. The Irishman, in my opinion, is not suited for his labors. Now, our butler, the French girl, is exemplary, and none better could be secured. By the by, John, while I think of it, Lucy Harrison was inquiring your age on yesterday.

John (bursting into a temper)—The ideal! The impertinence of the woman! Of course it is all right to ask yours, but I should be as good as to ask her and above the curiosity of the vulgar.

Tears again steal into his eyes and trickle noiselessly to his breast as he contemplates this unpardonable insult.

Breakfast over, Susan arises, calls for overcoat and rubbers and turns to go out.

John (interrupting)—Wife, I desire to do some shopping this morning. Please give me $20.

Susan—Oh, John, John, you are very extravagant and will break me yet. I think you might try to economize during these hard times.

John—But, Susan, you know my cosmetics are out, and I must have more before tonight, because I don't care to make a worse appearance than Mrs. B's husband. Besides, my pug is unwell and must have the immediate attention of a skillful physician. But I shall take Fido in the carriage to Dr. Curo instead of paying extra for a visit.

Susan—Very well, John. You shall have it. You were always a dear creature—so kind and thoughtful, but, sweetheart, do wear a small bonnet to the theater this evening. I detect in you hats, as do other ladies, and be sure to put on your long gloves, so as to conceal the horrid imprints of vaccination on your arm and don't require me to wait a long time while preparing your toilet. It is so annoying.

John—All right, dear. You will find me ready. Don't forget the opera tickets, for I am in such a flutter to hear the new singer—such a charming soprano voice, and he is so handsome, a native born Italian.

Susan—Goodby, I'll remember. Kisses him affectionately, lights a cigar, boards an electric car and is off for the troubles and cares of commercial life. John re-enters the house, hastens the children to school, gives a few directions to the servants, changes his breakfast gown for a walking costume, and the last glimpse we catch of our fine deinde hero he is standing on a chair, holding his skirts well over his knees and screaming lustily at the approach of a tiny, frisky mouse. John is exceptionally plump, and the first syllable of his daily prayer is a plea for the emancipation of his sex.
